RBC Select Aggressive Growth Portfolio

Commentary

- ▶ Over the past three months, the RBC Select Aggressive Growth Portfolio declined 15.1%.
- ▶ During the quarter, global equity markets were gripped by fears of further fallout in the U.S. financial system. Share prices encountered enormous volatility as the bailout drama unfolded during the quarter.
- ▶ A concern over the possibility of a looming recession has resulted in a cyclical bear market for commodity stocks, pushing previous sector leaders such as Energy, Materials and Industrials lower by 26.9%, 33.6% and 12.9%, respectively. Consequently, as resource stocks account for 43.6% of the Index, the massive sell-off in these stocks resulted in an 18.4% plunge in the overall S&P/TSX Composite Index. Within this group, the RBC Canadian Equity Fund fell 18.4%, while the RBC North American Growth Fund finished 18.9% lower, as smaller-cap companies generally underperformed larger-cap names.
- ▶ The U.S. economy has been one of the hardest hit by the financial crisis. Nevertheless, U.S. equity markets have outperformed most global stock markets during the quarter. The S&P 500 Index fell 4.5%, while the S&P 400 Mid-Cap Index fell 7.1%, both in Canadian dollar terms. The RBC U.S. Equity Fund and the RBC U.S. Mid-Cap Equity Fund both underperformed their respective Indices, returning -11.0% and -14.0% in Canadian dollars.
- ▶ International markets also trended lower as the outlook for the global economy deteriorated. The top-performing international fund was the RBC Global Dividend Growth Fund, which fell 15.1%, followed by the RBC Asian Equity Fund, down 15.4% during the quarter. All funds within the international component outperformed the benchmark MSCI EAFE Total Return Index, which declined 16.8% in Canadian dollar terms.
